

ABSTRACT

The present invention provides a system for characterizing voids in test samples. An x-ray emission inducer scans a target such as a via on a test sample. A metallization or thin film layer emits x-rays as a result of the scan. The x-ray emission intensity can be measured and compared against a control measurement. The information obtained can be used to characterize a void in the scan target.

TOP SECRET // EYES ONLY